is composed of the prettiest girls of Memphis, who are fired by the hope of being able to do something to aid the Central Methodist church. Great speculation has originated as to the cause of their adopting the broom as their chosen weapon. Some people entertain one opinion, some another. An ascetic classical scholar explains it by saying that the broom was the mythical instrument with which Juno used to increase Jupiter's respect for her, and he saw in this organization a

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN-I never made a speech to more than one young lady in my life—I mean at the same time, and it is with considerable timidity that I attempt to address so many lovely ones to-night, from the fact, I know, that there is not a young lady in this room who has not at some time or other listened to a young man upon a more engaging subject, whose poetic language would challenge the most endowed faculties of the human mind, and thus justly cause you to look upon what I might say with an eye more capable of perceiving the insig-nificance of my few and brief remarks. Therefore, I do not wish you to judge me oo harshly unless you give me an opportunity of expatiating upon the same subject. I am not insensible to that ambition which seeks the good opinion of others, nor am I seeks the good opinion of others, nor am I ungrateful for the exhibition of partiality and friendship which you have so kindly shown me. There is nothing so flattering to a man as for him to know that he is appreciated by the fair sex, and your action has thoroughly demonstrated the fact that I occupy that enviable position; and anything that I might say toward expressing my heartful territude for the compliment paid me felt gratitude for the compliment paid me would be tame in regard to the real feelings which crowd my inmost soul. In accepting this flattering position, I solemnly obli-gate myself to discharge the duties im-posed upon me, to the best of my ability, without partiality or favor, and to use every effort in my power toward furthering the in-terests and promoting the welfare of the Memphis Broom Guards, and should I fail, it will be the fault of the head and not the heart. Berry Q. Branch, the thief who robbed the store of Mesers. Fulmer, Burton & Co., moved for a new trial. While Mr. J. J. DuBose was making an argument for Exchange, at a meeting held vesterday:

Resolved, That the Board of Directors will continue to receive, but will not act on applications for membership to the Cotton Exchange until rules have been adopted for the future management of the exchange as a stock company.

The membership of the exchange is to the membership of the exchange is to the membership of the exchange is to the future management of the exchange is to the membership of the exchange is to the future management of the exchange is to the exchange is to the future management of the exchange is to the testimony of Mr. Fullmer, he understanding it one way and Judge Horrigan another. In order that there might be no mistake in the matter, the judge sent for Mr. Fullmer, who gave substantially the statement claimed by the Court. DuBose himself made answer then. He was angry, and he preferred waiting until yesterday to explain himself. He denied all intention of reflecting on the court and Judge Horrigan, therefore, re-mitted the fine and the imprisonment. In doing so he was guided by what had occurred while court, was in session, and did not ake into consideration the incipient assult made by Mr. DuBose after court had adjourned.
